

In golf almost everything comes in threes. Thinking of the swing in threes is helpful not only in teaching but in learning and remembering important information.

Putting, like many other parts of the game, can be broken down into three things, two that are good to do and one that should not be done.

You can have the ball position in the middle of your stance or a little forward of center, but never have the ball behind the center of your stance.

You can have your hands directly over the ball at address or a little in front, but never have your hands behind the ball.
